This meticulously researched book offers a compelling and comprehensive analysis of the devastating impact of climate change and industrial pollution on global agriculture, detailing how rising temperatures, erratic weather, and industrial contaminants undermine crop productivity and farmer livelihoods. The author's exceptional effort to illuminate the intricate links between industrial activities, environmental degradation, and agricultural sustainability makes this an indispensable resource. The book helps in equipping policymakers, environmentalists, and climate action leaders with critical, actionable insights, fostering the development of robust strategies for climate mitigation and pollution reduction.
